Inmates Remain Active in Programs at Holmes RCF

LEXINGTON – Holmes-Humphreys Regional Correctional Facility continues to expand programming opportunities and participation for incarcerated individuals working toward positive change.

Pictured here in front of the facility's mural are participants from the following recently completed programs:

Welding Training: Participants received both classroom instruction and hands-on training to develop valuable trade skills for the workforce.

Forklift Certification: Individuals recently graduated after completing safety and operational training to earn forklift certification.

Alcohol & Drug (A&D): Participants completed programming focused on accountability, recovery, and making better life decisions.

"Programs like these help individuals develop discipline, responsibility, and real-world skills that support successful reentry into society," said Director Derrick Chambers, who manages the programs that include the regional facilities.

Chambers said a special thanks goes to Warden Barry Rule, Holmes County Sheriff Willie March, and the Holmes County Regional staff for their continued leadership and commitment to keeping individuals productive, engaged, and focused on rehabilitation.

"These efforts demonstrate that corrections is about not only custody and security, but also about opportunity, accountability, and second chances," Chambers said.
